

To our out-of-town visitors, a cheery how-do-you-do. Richmond hospitality, as all the world knows, doesn't come just from the hand, but from the heart.

Be joyful, see the sights---our historic city is full of em---and go home broadened in mind and refreshed in

And, if you need anything to wear, we've a tip-top shop, whose counters groan beneath the weight of the newest and smartest clothes from the centres of fashion.

Each numbered its acres in thousands. The crops were wheat and tobacco. Each plantation had its orchard, but only for family use. The fruit was in prodigal abundance and of fine quality, but nobody thought of seiling it. That would have been a matter wholly out of keeping with the engagements of a landed proprietor. Now all is changed, and the change is far-reaching. The average farm is not one-tenth as large, but the aggregate product is more than len times as great. Tobacco and wheat have disappeared, and the orchard has come to be the main chance.

how to farm—the most lucrative business that they can train for.

I had never seen such apples. I weighed and measured some of them, and here are the figures, taking the smallest as well as the largest, all being perfect in form and soundness:

Winesaps—From 9 5-8 inches to 11 3-4 inches in circumference, the larger weighing over 9 ounces.

Pippins—10 1-4 to 12 3-4 inches in circumference, the larger weighing 15 1-2 ounces.

I have traveled in thirty-odd of the States of our republic, and in six other countries, and have also visited a half-dozen great international expositions. Judging from the Boswell and McCue orchards, I am led to the conclusion that the best apple region of the world is here in Albemarie.

Going again over the tramps of my boyhood, I climbed a hill the other day, from which I saw hundreds of acres in apple and peach trees, sending with their lusclous burden of scarlet and gold, and the intelligent application of sclence has wrought a wondrous change in both the quantity and the quality of the full. This is notably true of two nearby orchards, of which I have seen a good deal during the present gathering season, the owners, Dr. M. L. McCue and Mr. H. R. Boswell kindig explaining fully their methods of culture. I no longer hold the notion I once held of the dolec far niente life of the owner of a good orchard. He has more to do. I have
